IRS Reaffirm Phase II Violations

RICHMOND – The Cost of Living Council recently issued regulations reaffirming its sanctions for Phase II profit margin violations.

Firms classed as Tier I or II during Phase II (generally those with $50 million or more in annual revenues) remain subject to the full range of Phase II sanctions if they exceed their profit margin ceiling for a fiscal year ending before January 11, 1973.

The new regulations also extend repurification privileges to May 4, 1973 for companies categorized as Tier III (generally those with less than $50 million in annual sales) under Phase II regulations. During the 30-day period following April 4, firms over their profit margin for a fiscal year ending prior to January 11, 1973, may submit to the Internal Revenue Service a plan for dollar-for-dollar remission of the overage, thereby avoiding double or triple penalties.

Companies which do not notify the Internal Revenue Service within the 30-day period of their intent to repurify will be subject to the full range of sanctions for profit margin violations, in cluding treble damages.

The repurification privilege was extended for Tier III firms to encourage voluntary compliance and because the Council recognizes that small firms do not have the same resources as larger firms for predicting possible fiscal year profit margin violations.

The Internal Revenue Service is investigating more than1,000 companies with yearly revenues under $50 million to determine compliance with profit margin requirements, The nationwide survey will cover companies in a wide range of industries.

Wife's Duty

Smith had been scolding his wife and ended up saying, "And I believe you fib a little at times."

"But I mean well," his wife returned meekly, "I think it's a wife's duty to speak well of her husband, occasionally."

Used To It

"Just why do you want a married man to work for you, rather than a bachelor?" asked the curious friend.

"Well," signed the employer, "the married men don't get so upset if I yell at them."
